The broad, conically rising foot holds the up-turned, pear-shaped body and ends in a long, horn-shaped neck and top. There are wing-like, moulded handles on the two sides of the body the neck is surrounded by a frilled glass thread. The body is veined with bluish-brown against a red base, similar to semi-precious stones. The handles and the glass thread are greenish grey. The form is a variant of classical urns the technique and the style, however, imitates Venetian-Murano Renaissance.
